

IN MEMORY

by Edward H. McCune

Forgotten! Can it be a few swift rounds

Of time's great wheel has crushed to naught

The memory of your face?

The works your hands have wrought?

Forgotten! It cannot be;

Scarce has one Autumn veiled earth's living

Since you lived, loved, and mingled with us,

Rejoicing with the glad, sympathizing with the sad.

Firm was your mind and hand,

As the great oak that grows mid forest,

Proud of its strength and beauty;

Such was your life, firm and beautiful.

Clad in ambition's might, yet staunch for truth and right

Forgotten! No, we cannot forget,

Or, when we do, farewell to love and right;

To hopes sweet tendance, to valor and ambition.

To those qualities which make a man

A ready servant to the community in which he lives.
